Stranradis, automobile mechanic, was arraigned in West Side court yesterday afternoon, charged with having struck his wife, Jennie, in the nose at Forty-sixth street and Eighth avenue last Friday night. The wife, who lives in West Fifty-third street, was the complainant and had witnesses to prove that she had been struck.

Stranradis explained that he and his wife are separated by mutual consent and they are not at all friendly. He was standing on the corner on the night in question talking to some of his friends when his wife came along, accompanied by two men and another woman.
